

KALIUM

Brand structure

Make it easier to choose good.

People are good when it's easier to choose good. Kalium builds the mechanism that makes it easier: for founders, for wealth holders, for the market.

One thesis, four expressions.

Kalium platform

The trust layer. Reserved, precise, beautiful.
Built for the rooms where $500M gets decided.

Loaded publication

The pull layer. Substack + podcast hosting the conversation everyone circles and nobody centralizes. Expressive so Kalium can stay composed.

The instrument

The one radical thing: capped-return equity; surplus becomes public goods, chosen by the founder. Working names: dynamic / aligned equity.

The gatherings

The thesis made physical. Founders, GPs, aligned asset holders. Proof the better party exists.

More is possible.

Conventional at a glance. Radical on inspection.

"We're trying to change nothing in the system except for one incredibly radical thing."

– Camille, founder

Every expression gets tested against that sentence, in that order. Pattern-match to what makes conventional capital comfortable: the structure, the terms, the rooms, the vocabulary – and hide the radical swap inside.

A Trojan horse can't look like a horse costume.

What we say when it matters

Kalium is an investment platform piloting a new asset class: equity that creates public goods alongside private returns.

We take LP positions in early-stage funds and co-invest alongside conventional investors, on conventional terms with one difference.

Returns above an agreed cap are reinvested into the company to create public goods, chosen by the founder, born from what the company already does best.

Not impact investing. Not concessionary. A more efficient way for the market to make the two things people actually want: money, and a world they're proud of.

One radical thing

Same terms

We only co-invest alongside conventional investors, in conventional companies.

Same rooms

LP-first structure: we're invested in our GPs' success before we ever share a cap table.

One different outcome

Everything pattern-matches to normal, deliberately. Scale requires compatibility.

Public goods at the source

We only co-invest alongside conventional investors, in conventional companies.

LP-first structure: we're invested in our GPs' success before we ever share a cap table.

Everything pattern-matches to normal, deliberately. Scale requires compatibility.

A heavyweight bench

No. 3 Not a little thing

Housed within an $8B hedge-fund platform.

Professional, competitive, prepared.

Our LP positions mean we win when our partners win.

Designed to be copied

No. 4 Public pilot

The instrument is templatized and published as a public resource. Copying us is the point.

Success is standardization: within five years, a Goldman-comparable manager offers this as an asset class.

The horizon is policy: tax treatment for capital deployed this way.

Why the skeptic stays in the room

Reasons to believe

- Structured as co-investment alongside conventional capital, never instead of it, never against it.
- Built inside an $8B platform, not a garage. The follow-on check is real.
- A decade of experiments in rewriting capital sits behind the thesis & this is the scaled version, not the first draft.
- Industry agnostic, with conviction areas: AI, bio and security, healthcare, research, industrials.
- The documents are public. We have nothing to hide, because being copied is the point.

ISSUE 01 — WHAT DO WE DO WITH ALL THIS MONEY?

The name

Loaded

Wealthy.

A question charged with everything unsaid.

Ready to fire.

The pun carries the brand's wit so the masthead doesn't have to try.

The money conversation for people who already have it

Not how to get rich — what wealth is for. Hosted by the people building an actual answer, not scolding from the sidelines.

The register

The step-outside conversation. The party's loud; someone finally says the true thing. Relief, wit, forward motion. Zero philanthropy-speak. If a sentence could open a gala, cut it.

The rule that keeps it honest.

Loaded never sells Kalium. It hosts the conversation Kalium is one answer to. The moment it reads as content marketing, it's dead in exactly the way every other brand is dead.

Four standing sections

01

The people who chose differently

Conversations with wealth holders and founders who broke the default — what it cost, what it paid.

02

The mechanics

The instrument explained. Field notes and numbers from the pilot. Build-in-public, for an asset class.

03

The essays

The rant, refined. The story we got sold, the moral injury of choosing against your values, the efficiency argument. Confidence, not heat.

04

The room

Dispatches from the gatherings and the network. Proof the better party exists.

Tagline options

01

"What's all this money for?"

02

"For people with money and questions."

03

"A loaded question, every week."

04

"Money, with somewhere to go."

KALIUM
Transition story

01 — Concede the machine

Capitalism works. It's the best machine anyone has built for turning ideas into value.

We're not here to fix it. We're here because of what we keep doing with it.

02 — Indict the story, not the people

We got sold a story: make as much as you can, take it all out, and someday...if you're generous... give some back.

Extract here, repair there. Nobody actually loves this story. It's just the only one on offer.

Beat 03 — Name the inefficiency

We pay twice:
privatize the upside, then fund the repairs from the outside.

The same companies could have been creating public goods all along from what they do best.
Fortunes and lifetimes go to fixing what could have been built in.

Beat 04 — The one radical thing

Kalium changes nothing about how you invest... Except one thing.

Above an agreed cap, surplus returns are reinvested in the company to create public goods — chosen by the founder, built from the company's core competency. That's it. That's the whole revolution.

Beat 05 — Make it inevitable

The goal isn't to be special.
It's to be standard.

Piloting now, at early stage, templates published as we go. In five years this isn't a movement. It's a line item at the largest asset managers in the world. More is possible. We're making it easier to choose.

KALIUM
Tone & voice

The five words we highlighted

Frank.

Smart.

Professional.

Trustworthy.

Provocative.

Frank.

Honest, forthright, unperformed. We say the quiet part in plain words "nobody actually loves this story" and we welcome the skeptic's push-back, because we had the same doubts first. We earn elite rooms precisely by never performing for them.

Smart.

Distinct, concise, jargon-free. The standard Camille set in the kickoff. Smart means the reader never has to work to understand us; the idea is radical enough without the vocabulary showing off. If a sentence could appear in any fund's deck, it doesn't appear in ours.

Professional.

We are a heavyweight, housed inside a heavyweight, and we talk like one. Prepared, precise, competitive. Never defensive about the cap — the efficiency argument lands as market insight, not apology. Values-aligned and soft are different things; we're proof.

Trustworthy.

Big-sister energy. Friends, not authority. We invite "here's where we're at, want to try this?" and never lecture. Skin in the game backs every claim: LP positions, published templates, co-invested capital. The reader just stepped outside the loud party and finally got to talk to someone real.

Provocative.

Handle with intent. The one radical thing, said calmly. We provoke by reframing "you're paying twice" never by scolding or shock. This is the attribute that keeps Kalium from reading as just another fund; the other four are what keep it safe to deploy.

KALIUM
Go-to-market

Three jobs to be done, in order of appearance.

Job 01 — Introduce

Put Kalium and the instrument into the world as finance innovation & never as impact.

Key message

A new asset class, piloted inside an $8B platform. Conventional terms, one radical difference.

Job 02 — Convene

Own the centralized conversation about what wealth is for.

Key message

A new asset class, piloted inside an $8B platform. Conventional terms, one radical difference.

Job 03 — Prove

Kill the cap-table fear with evidence, deal by deal.

Key message

It works. Investors stayed. Founders chose. The goods are real.

Introduce

Put Kalium and the instrument into the world as finance innovation – never as impact.

Key channels

Site
White paper
Published instrument template
Finance & business press
Direct network

The idea

Launch the brand, the white paper, and the public template together. The asset class arrives fully dressed: story, mechanics, and documents anyone can pick up.

PR frames it as market innovation with a straight face.

Convene

Own the centralized conversation about what wealth is for.

Key channels

Loaded — Substack + podcast
Gatherings & dinners
The advisor shell

The idea

Loaded hosts the conversation everyone's circling and nobody centralizes; the gatherings make the network physical. The better party, on the record. Loaded never sells Kalium; that's why it works.

Prove

Kill the cap-table fear with evidence, deal by deal.

Key channels

- Pilot deals
- Case studies
- GP partnerships
- Template adoption by others

The idea

Every closed deal produces two stories: the conventional return and the public good.
Tell both, side by side, every time until "would this deter other investors?" answers itself.
